Golden Parachutes – An Overview

- Golden parachute payments are governed by Section 280G and 4999 of the Code. If applicable, these Code sections generally:
 - Impose a 20% excise tax on disqualified individuals for their receipt of an excess parachute payment, and
 - Deny a corporate deduction for the same

- Only “excess” (amounts exceeding 2.99x the “base amount”) “parachute payments” that are “contingent” on a CIC that are paid to a “disqualified individual” are subject to adverse tax consequences under 280G
 - Negate any of these 4 elements and 280G would not apply to that particular payment

- Once the above adverse tax consequences are triggered, the 20% excise tax (and the corresponding disallowed deduction) applies to parachute payments that exceed 1x the base amount

Defined Terms

- Disqualified individual
 - If at any time within the 12-month period prior to CIC, the individual is an employee or independent contractor providing personal services, AND is either
 - A shareholder owning more than 1% of the Company’s FMV;
 - Is an officer (a facts and circumstances test, however, any title that includes “officer” will be presumed to be an officer); or
 - Is a highly compensated individual (defined to include the lesser of the highest paid 1% of the Company’s employees or the highest paid 250 employees of the Company)
 - The number of possible disqualified individuals is limited to the lesser of:
 - 50 employees, or
 - The greater of (i) three employees or (ii) 10% of the employees

- Parachute payment
 - It is in the nature of compensation, and
 - Payment is contingent on a change in ownership or effective control of the Company
 - However, certain payments are excluded from the definition, such as:
 - Payments from a qualified retirement plan,
 - Payments representing reasonable compensation for services to be rendered after the CIC

- Excess
 - A payment is excessive if the aggregate present value of all payments to a disqualified individual that would otherwise be parachute payments equals or exceeds 3x the “base amount”
 - Base amount is the disqualified individual’s average annualized compensation received from the Company for the 5 most recent tax years ending prior to the tax year within which the CIC occurred

- Change in control
 - Typically a sale of more than 50% of the total FMV or total voting power of the Company’s stock

- Change in effective control
 - One person (or a group) acquires during a 12-month period 20% ownership of the stock of the Company, or
 - A majority of the Board is replaced during a 12-month period who were not endorsed by a majority of the Board prior to the appointment or election of such members

Mitigation Alternatives

- Alternative No. 1 – Do nothing
 - Deduction would be disallowed and the disqualified individual would be subject to an excise tax

- Alternative No. 2 – Allow the payment but provide the disqualified individual with protection through a full or partial gross-up
 - Not a favorable design with ISS and certain other institutional shareholders

- Alternative No. 3 – Implement a cutback so that the parachute payment would not exceed 2.99x base amount (i.e., the threshold test is NEVER satisfied)
 - May not be ideal for a disqualified individual who could be financially better off paying the excise tax (instance where payment would otherwise equal, for example, 7x base amount)
 - Conversely, a cutback could be financially advantageous to a disqualified individual if the payment exceeding 2.99x base amount would otherwise be less than the amount of the excise tax (instance where payment would otherwise equal, for example, 3x base amount)
 - Remember, the excise tax applies to amounts exceeding 1x base amount

- Alternative No. 4 – Implement a hybrid cutback whereby a disqualified individual would be entitled to receive the greater of a 2.99x cutback or payment of the excess parachute payment with the 20% excise tax
 - This is also known as a “net better” provision
- Alternative No. 5 – Same as Alternative No. 4, but apply a cap so that if the payment triggers a 20% excise tax, that such payment will not exceed a certain dollar amount (thus artificially limiting the amount of the exposure)
- Alternative No. 6 – Implement a stockholder vote exception (only applicable to privately-held corporations), which generally means:
 - The disqualified individual irrevocably waives his/her right to the parachute payment that exceeds 2.99x his/her base amount,
 - Irrespective of the waiver, the payment is approved in a separate vote of the stockholders that is approved by more than 75% of the outstanding voting power,
 - Adequate disclosure to the stockholders must be made of all material facts,
 - The vote must establish the right of the disqualified individual to receive the payment
- Alternative No. 7 – Same as Alternative 6, but provide a gross-up if the corporation fails to seek stockholder approval
 - However, it is important to note that due to the full disclaimer requirement under the shareholder vote exception, the foregoing cannot be applied to the condition of gaining stockholder approval

- Alternative No. 8 – In the year preceding the year in which the CIC occurs, increase the disqualified individual's base amount in order to increase his/her 5 year average (thus increasing the 2.99x amount)
 - Accelerate vesting of equity awards,
 - Exercise non-statutory stock options,
 - Payout deferred compensation,
 - Increase bonus, and
 - Payout LTIP

- Alternative No. 9 – Structure the payment to be reasonable compensation paid for services rendered before the CIC
 - Burden of proof is clear and convincing evidence
 - If the burden is satisfied, the amount of the reasonable compensation reduces the excess parachute payment
 - In determining reasonable compensation, relevant factors include:
 - Nature of the services to be rendered,
 - Individual's historic compensation for such services, and
 - Compensation for those performing similar services where payment is not contingent on a CIC

- Alternative No. 10 – Structure the payment to represent reasonable compensation for services to be rendered in the future (thereby negating the “contingent” element)
 - Burden of proof is clear and convincing evidence, and if the burden is satisfied, then the amount of the reasonable compensation for future services reduces the excess parachute payment
 - Payments for covenants not to compete can represent payment for future services if there is a reasonable likelihood that the agreement would be enforced against the individual. Addressing this point:
 - The payment does not have to be directly tied to the non-compete provision
 - Such payment represents compensation for services to be rendered after the CIC if it is “reasonable” in amount. Such amount is reasonable if it does not exceed the lesser of:
 - ❖ Reasonable compensation (determined using a benchmarking analysis against the peer group and after increasing the total compensation to the 90th percentile), and
 - ❖ The value of the non-compete, determined pursuant to an independent third-party appraiser, which is the difference between the enterprise value of the employer with and without the non-compete
 - Such payment reduces the excess parachute payment on a dollar-for-dollar basis
 - Thus, the value of the 280G reduction could be more than the severance pay directly associated with the non-compete

Select Open Questions

- As part of a CIC transaction, assume there is a desire to increase (or extend) the current non-competition term of a disqualified individual's restrictive covenant agreement. Does additional consideration need to be provided that is tied to the extension of the term?
 - There is no answer, and law firms differ on the point
 - There is a view by some that if the non-compete was extended or implemented solely to avoid 280G, even if such non-compete has the potential for a real negative impact to the disqualified individual, then the value of such non-compete should be limited to an amount less than its otherwise robust value
 - In this situation it is necessary to provide additional value or to implement a clawback for a current right (e.g., require that if the restrictive covenant is violated, that a portion of a SERP benefit or some other benefit will be clawed back)
 - In contrast, some take the view that if the target has the right to seek an injunction and the target's rights are not otherwise limited, then the entire reasonable compensation value of the covenant should be assignable to the parachute payments

- In the context of a disqualified individual who is terminating employment at the time of a CIC, the start date of his or her personal services with respect to the non-compete is known for purposes of determining reasonable compensation

- But what if the disqualified individual will continue to provide services after the CIC, such that the start date of his or her personal services with respect to the non-compete is not known as of the CIC? Does the value of reasonable compensation have to be limited because we do not know “when” the non-compete period will begin? My personal thoughts:
 - If the restricted period will lapse (e.g., 5th anniversary following CIC), then it might seem reasonable to apply a discount
 - But if the restricted period is a set time triggered from a termination of employment (e.g., 3 years following termination of employment), it seems appropriate to use the full value of reasonable compensation
